To me it tastes a bit like pancake syrup and it's sweet so I don't like it. However recently I've been obsessed with brown sugar, it's just so good. Now you can usually buy brown sugar in blocks, or you can buy caster sugar, but there's something about the texture of brown sugar that I love. Why I love brown sugar It's not too sweet. It's softer and smoother than white sugar. It's less sugary than caster sugar. It doesn't crystallise as easily. It has a wonderful molasses, sort of a caramel flavour. It's far less sticky than normal sugar. Now obviously brown sugar isn't as easy to come by as other sugars, but if you do try to find some, you should try to get it as local as possible, it tastes so much better. I like my brown sugar to be a bit more crunchy, not overly soft and gooey, so I love using caster sugar when I need to make recipes with lots of sugar. However when I'm making a dessert with less sugar, or if I want my brown sugar to stay really soft, I like to use brown sugar. I'm really not big on baking with white sugar and I've recently been trying to use brown sugar in more dishes than just on my pancakes and biscuits, I've found it's really good in brownies. I find it's best to use a ratio of white sugar to brown sugar depending on what the recipe calls for, but you can also experiment. 82157476af
